- Producing along with Kimmel's team are Michelle and Robert Smigel, whose Jon Stewart-led "Night of Too Many Stars" benefits for Comedy Central and HBO inspired Rober to create his own event, adding YouTube stars to the mix of comics and actors. The Smigels dedicated themselves to addressing the lack of services and schools for people with autism after witnessing it first hand as parents of their son Daniel.

- MARK ROBER QUOTE: "Autism awareness is such a personal cause for my family and me. It is inspiring to team up with Jimmy and Robert and create this unprecedented opportunity to bring together traditional entertainment stars with some of the world's biggest YouTube creators. I don't think we have ever seen these worlds unite on a scale like this before. The best part is that this is all being done for people in need and who are so deserving."
- ROBERT SMIGEL QUOTE: "It's been a year since we had to cancel our Night of Too Many Stars benefit and many of the programs and schools we support are hurting greatly. So we're beyond grateful to Mark and Jimmy for making this happen for NEXT for Autism."
- Additional sponsors include Nexo, White Castle, Tommy Hilfiger, Ty Beanie Babies, Guidehouse, New York Life Investments, and Conagra Foods
- Additional information about NEXT for AUTISM can be found here: <https://www.nextforautism.org/>
- The live stream will be powered exclusively by Tiltify - the creator-first fundraising platform for the digital generation.
